Spirit Week

Seniors won the Spirit Week competition, with the juniors in second place and the freshmen in third. The seniors' sign with a papier-mache Rambo and their drill sergeant routine helped them win.

Spirit Week consisted of only three days. The number-one costumes included Bryan Hendrix as a duck on Music Day, Troy Strom as a Rajneesh on Low-life Day, and Chris Whitlock on Blue and White Day.

The football team lost their game 38-14 against Falls City, while the volleyball team won their match.

The homecoming dinner was held the following week.

Seniors

A major highlight of the year for the seniors was winning the Spirit Week competition; after taking first in every event except for the Music Day performance, the class won overall first place and received the prize of pizza and videos.

Mike Pearson served as president of the class, Cinnamon Poulsom as vice president, Kathy Campbell as secretary/treasurer, and Dennis Hendrix as sergeant-at-arms. Patsy Jones and Ron Nicholson were advisers.

The group raised money for their senior trip in the spring through a variety of projects, including management of the pop machine, cake raffles, and mistletoe sales.

Sophomores

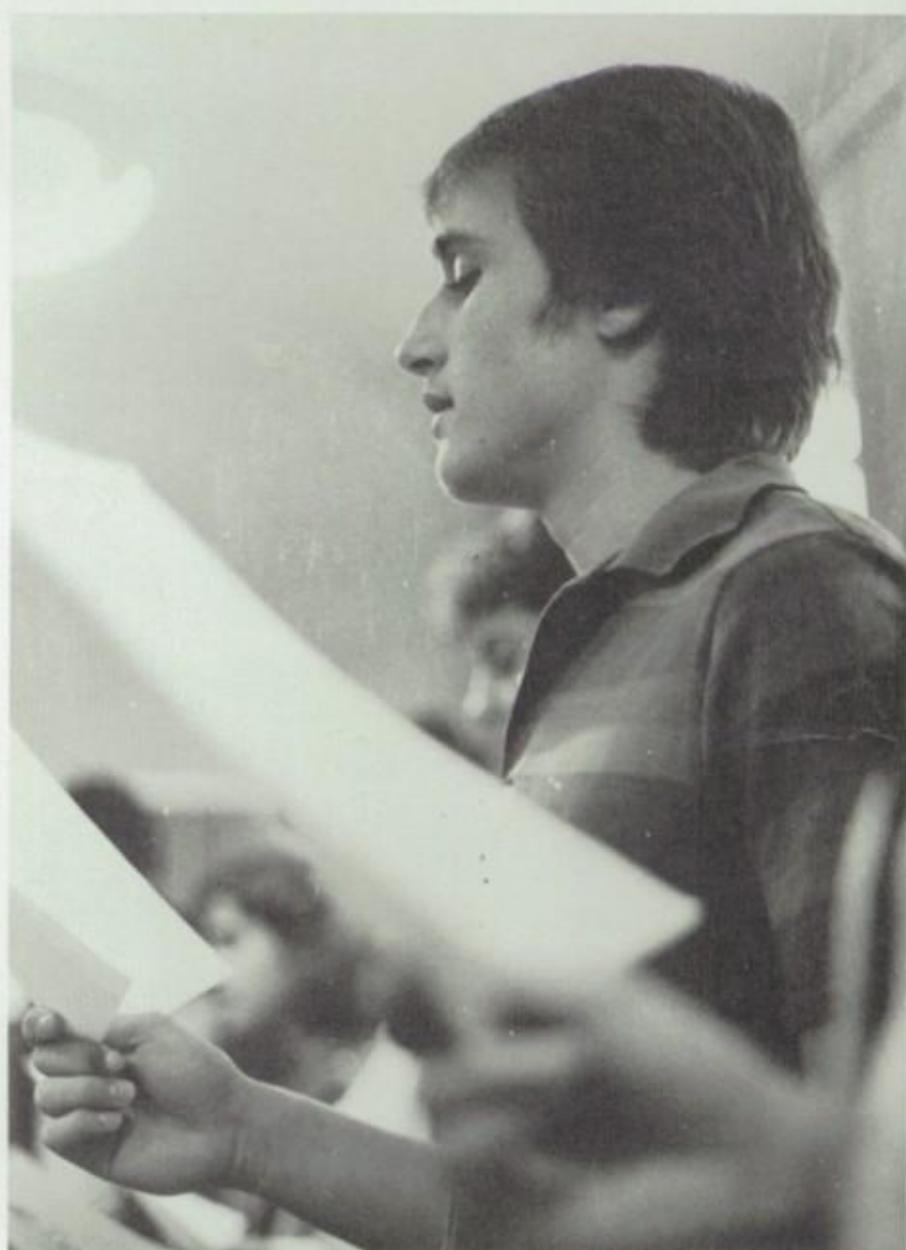

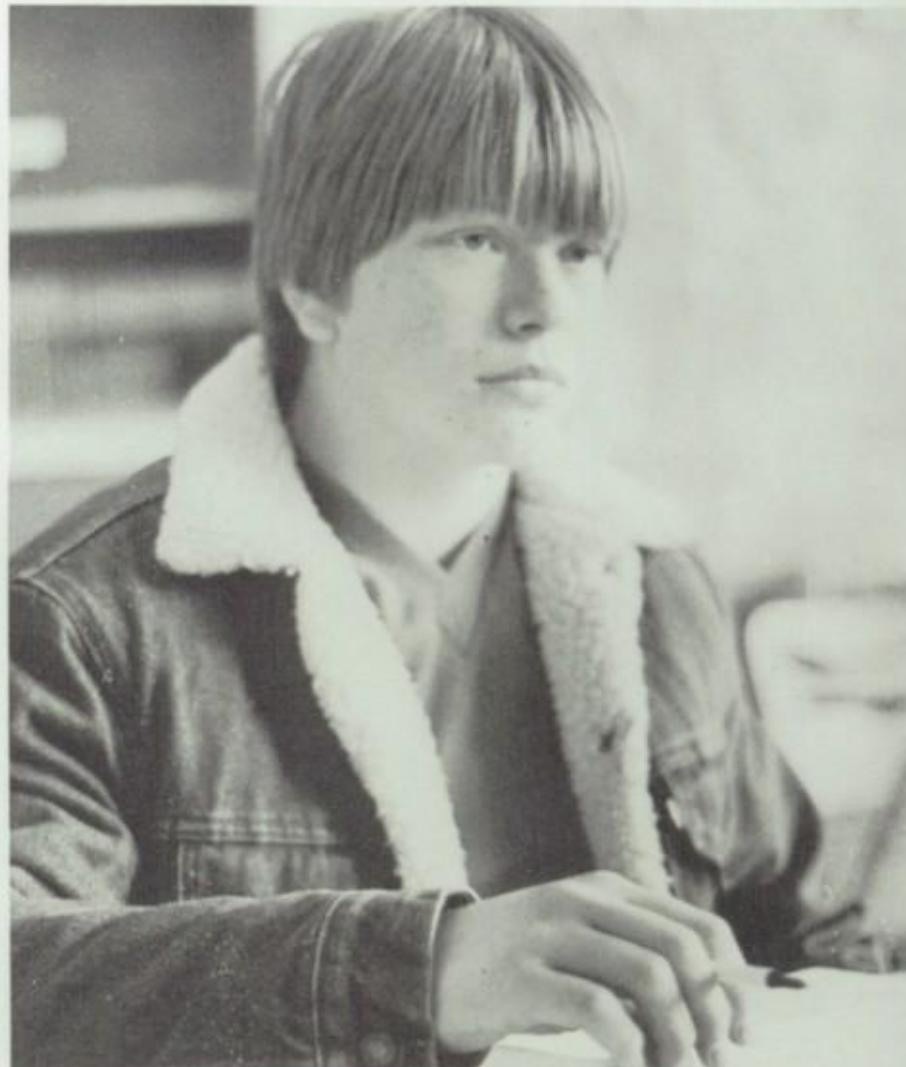

Although the sophomores did not place very well in the Spirit Week competition, their advisers thought they did a better job than ever before, and that the running of class meetings improved significantly.

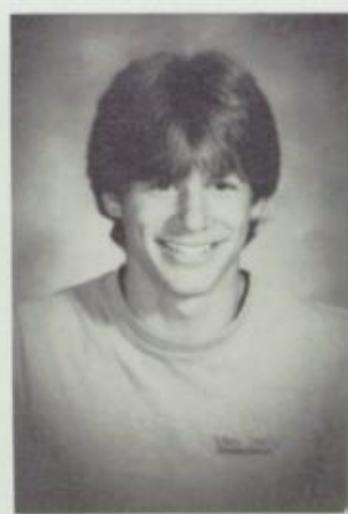

Burke Hendrix was class president, Chris Whitlock was vice president, and Shelly Davis was secretary/treasurer. Jim Mullenix and Bonnie Hill were advisers.

Football

In spite of a season with many injuries that set the team back, the Wolverines ended up with a winning record of 5-4. Ken France led in tackles with 110; Chris Bauer, who played in only five games before he was out for the season with a head injury, still led in rushing yards with 889. Jason Hill led in passing yards with 339; he replaced quarterback Mike Pearson, who had to take over a position in the backfield.

The team of 19 players had two new coaches; Greg Grant was the head coach, and Bob Smith assisted.

The players who got awards were Chris Bauer, Most Valuable Player; and Bryan Hendrix, Most Inspirational and Most Improved. Bryan Hendrix also made the first team of the Casco League All-Stars; Ken France and Chris Bauer made the second team.

Volleyball

This was the first year that an Alsea volleyball team ever advanced as far as the District Tournament. After a season record of 11-5, the team was eliminated after its losses to Detroit and Perrydale at the district level.

The 12-member team was coached by Gary Vaterlaus. He thought that the team played well throughout the season, and that they were well-prepared for district. "We were nervous, though," he said, "and a lot of our serves were out."

Jill Olsen was named Most Valuable Player, Ann Olsen Most Improved, and Cinnamon Poulsom Most Inspirational.

Cheerleading

After a three year period of a rule saying that people in a sport may not cheerlead, the administration made a change in the rule that let people do both.

The football cheerleaders were Kathy Campbell, Shelly Davis, Debbie Dalgas, Tammy Lampman, Maya Underwood, and Maggi Gonzalez.

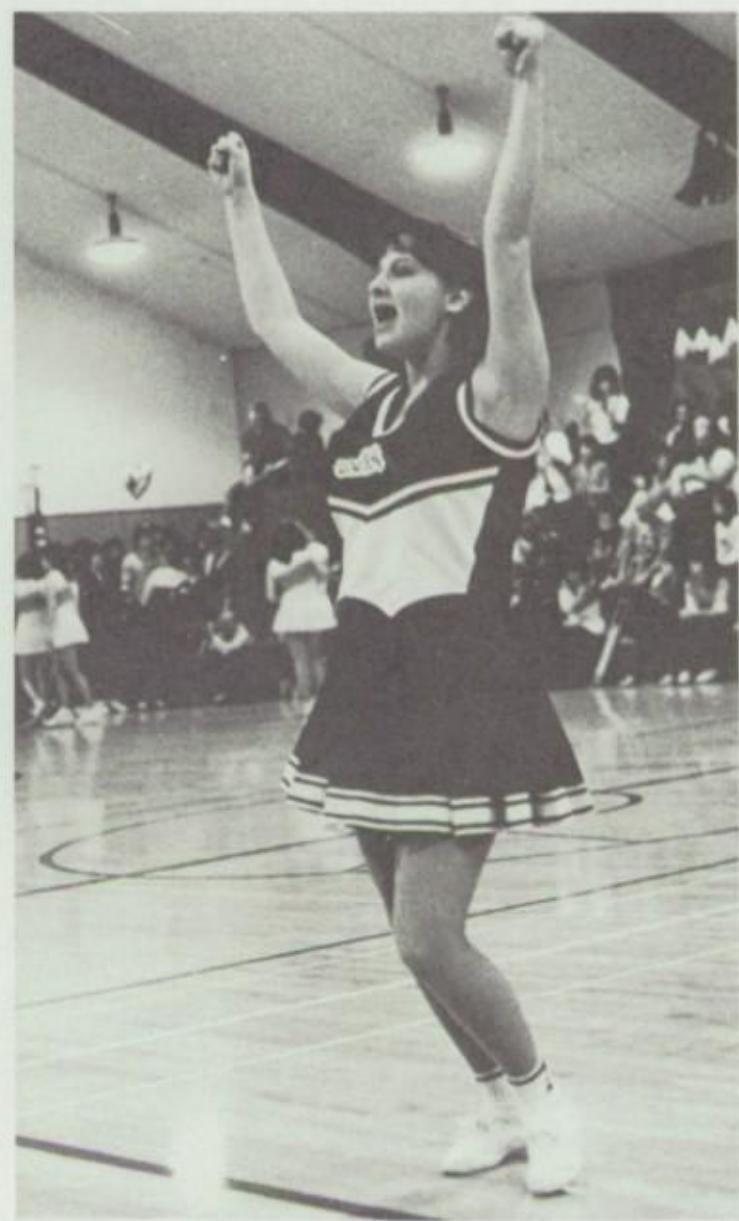

The J.V. basketball cheerleaders were Maya Underwood, Maggi Gonzalez, and Angel Mathews. On the varsity squad were Ann Olsen, Marlanea Passarge, Jennifer Faith, and the mascot was Stacy Sapp.

The advisers were Joni Olsen and Wendie France.

J.V. Basketball

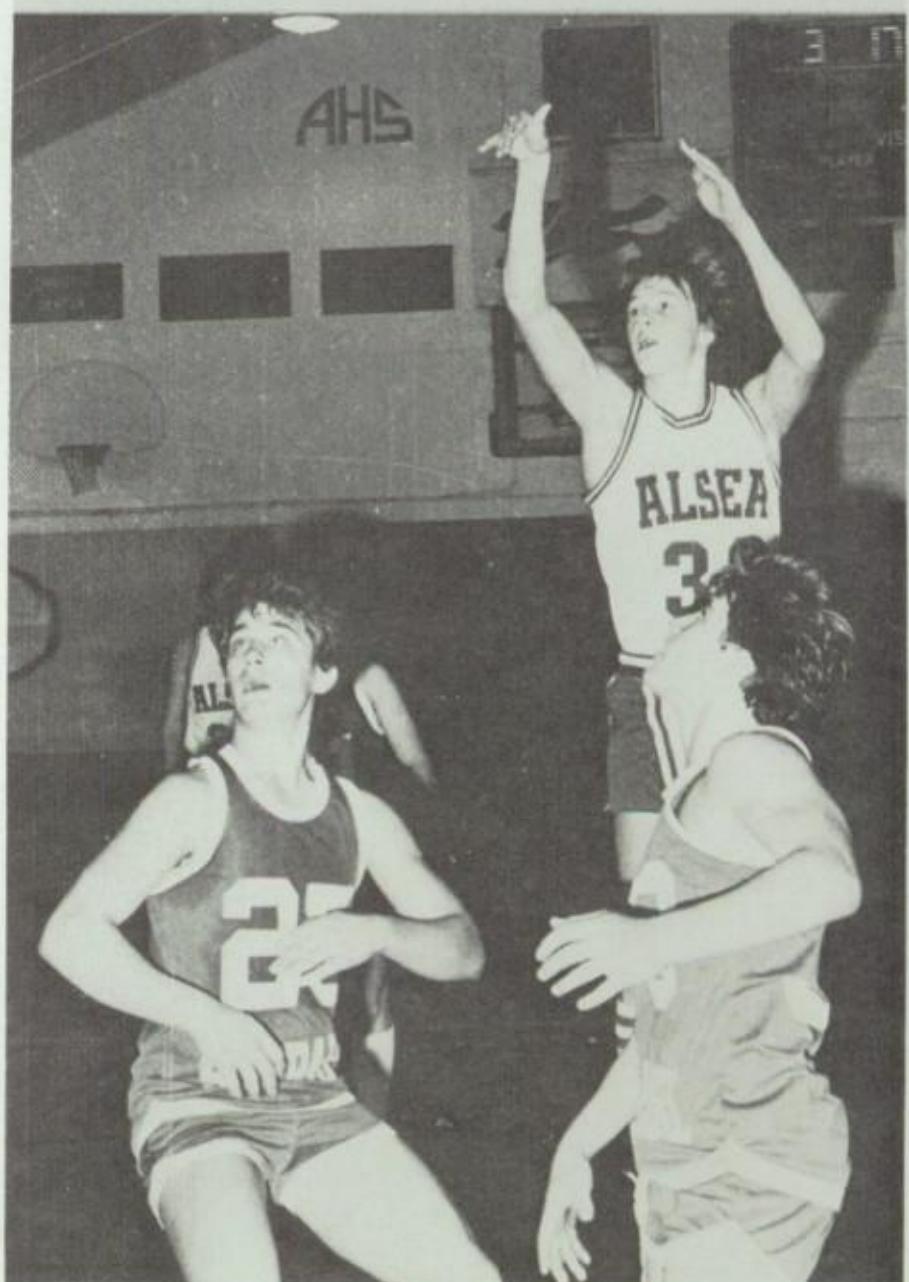

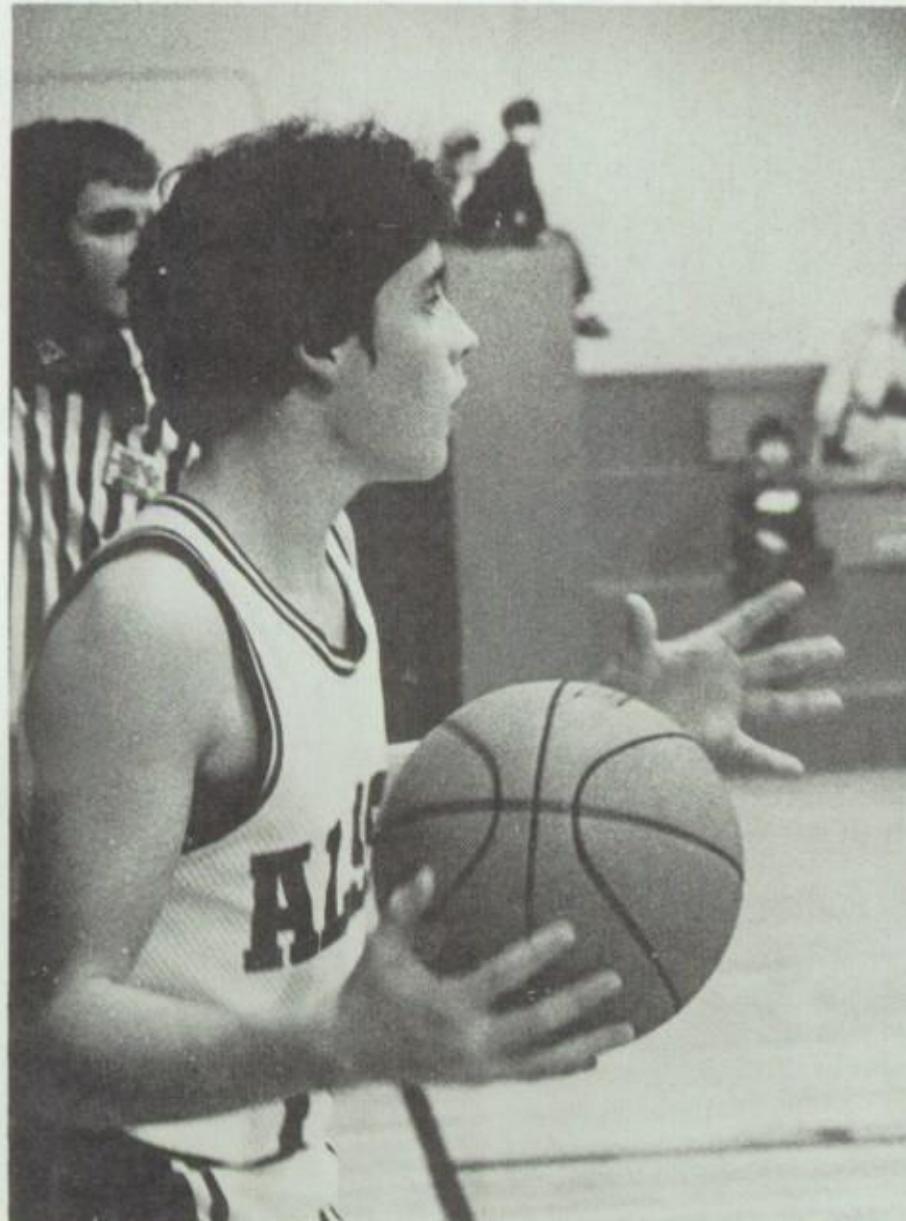

The J.V. team ended their season by taking second in the league with a record of 12-4. Jim Walters, an Alsea alumnus and former basketball player, coached the team, with Shorty Bowen, another alumnus, acting as assistant coach.

Walters said the team's main strengths were "their attitudes, defense, conditioning, and hustle."

Leading the team in scoring were Jon Short and Burke Hendrix. Torsten Green and Eric Sutter led in steals and assists.

Girls Basketball

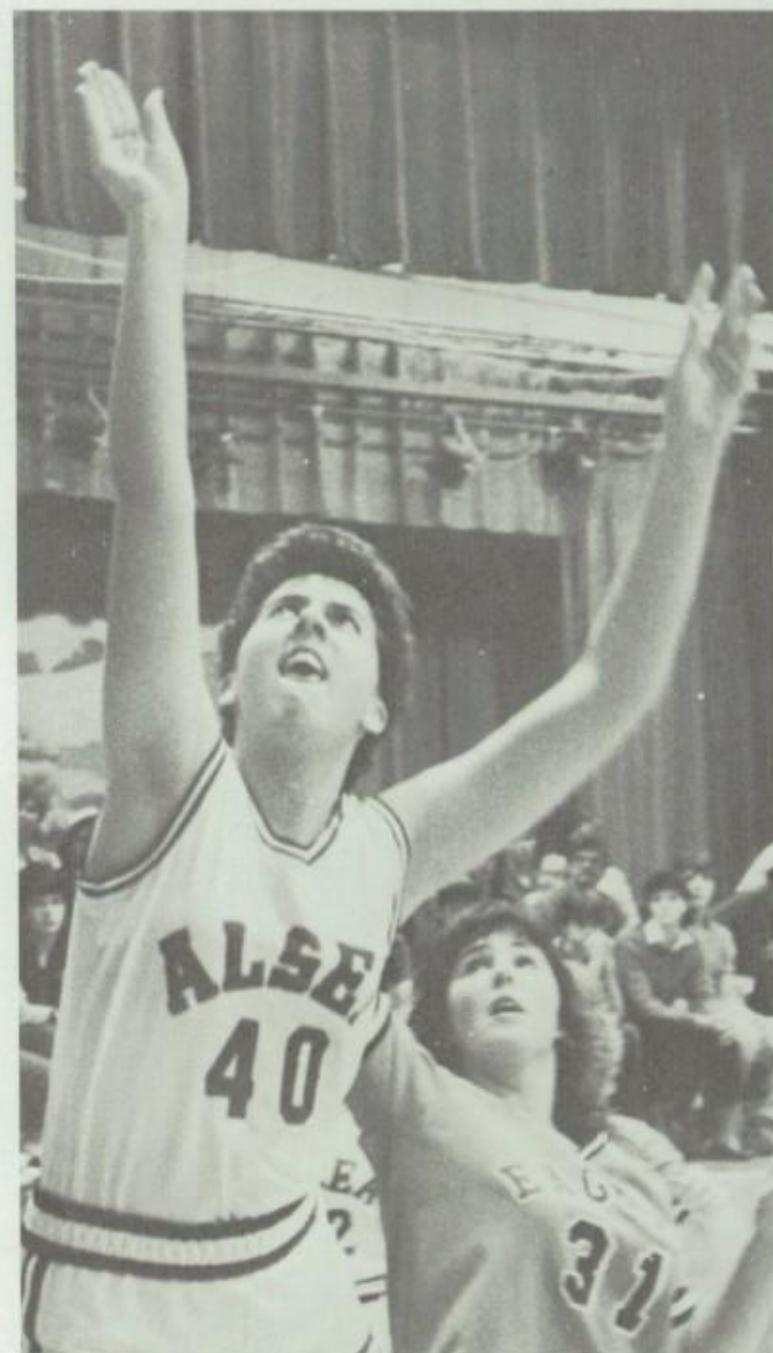

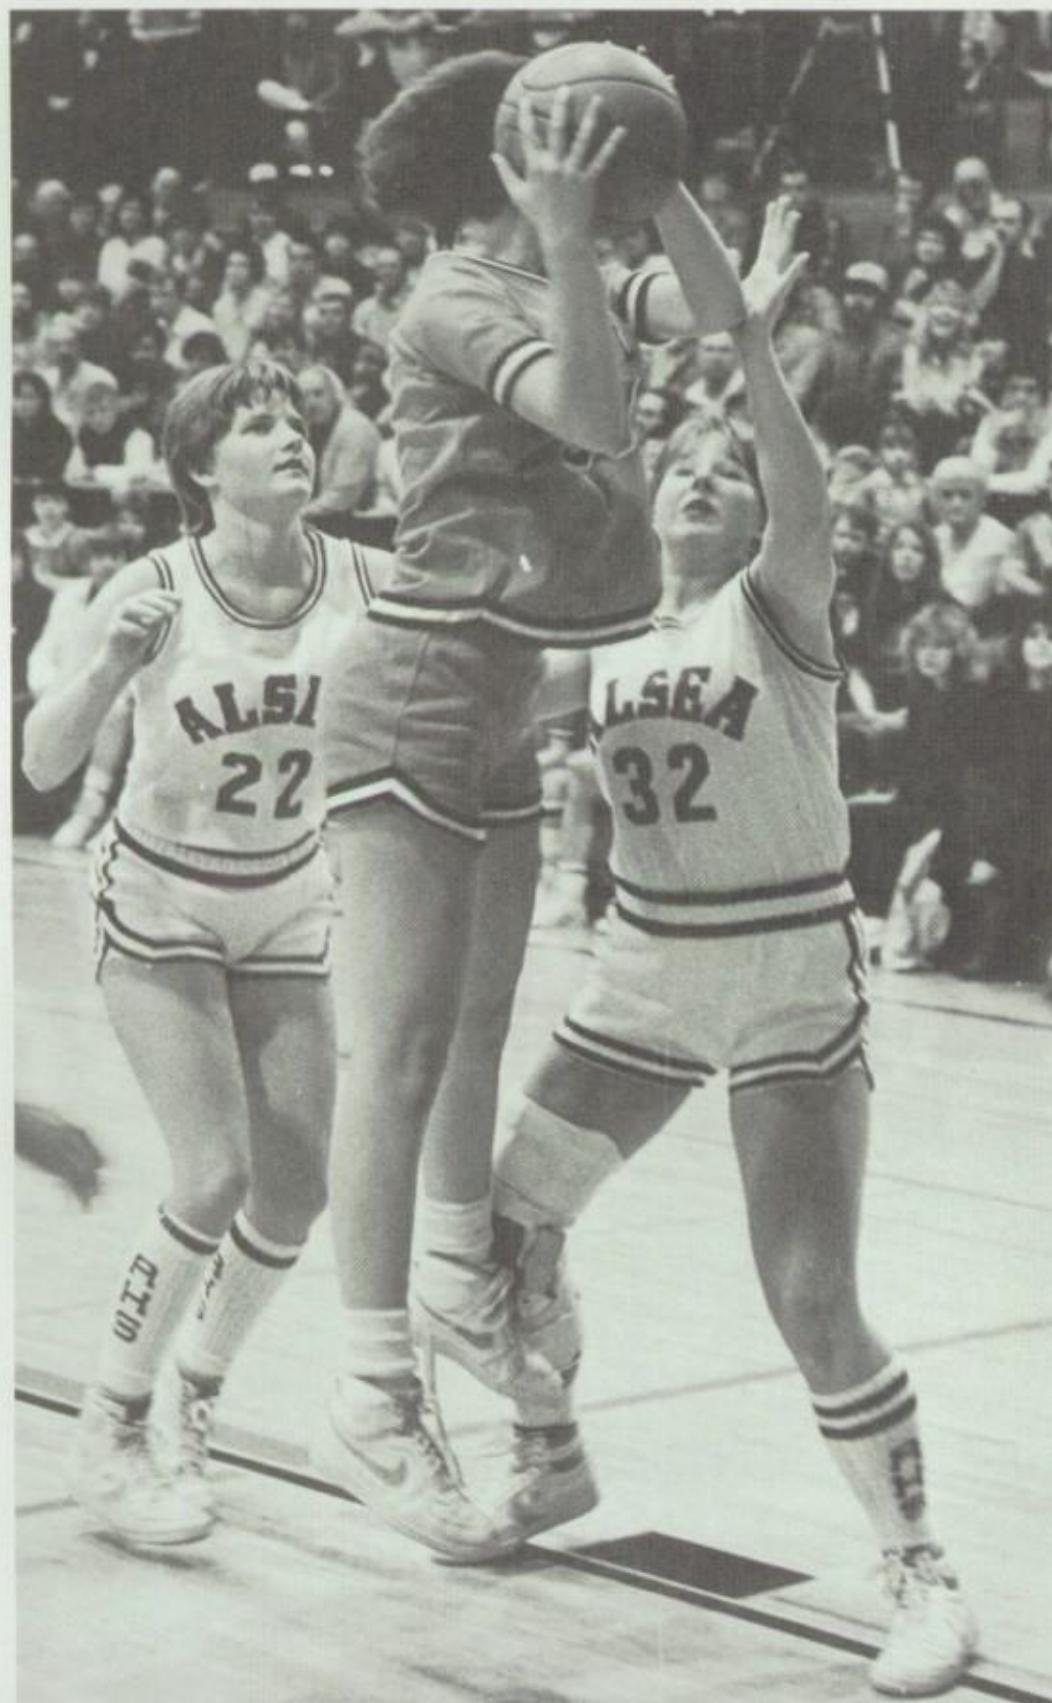

The girls' basketball team ended their season in Baker at the State Tournament with an overall record of 14-11. They had played Eddyville for first place of the Casco League and emerged second.

Jill Olsen made the District All-Star team and the League All-Star team; Ann Olsen also made the League second team, as did Angie Dixon.

Leading the team in scoring was Jill Olsen with 236, followed by Dixon with 219. Olsen was also high rebounder with 241. Morai Hendrix had the most steals with 55.

Coach Tim Rohrer said that the team's strengths were defense and their will to win, while a weakness was outside shooting. Joni Hendrix was assistant coach.

Boys' Basketball

The boys varsity team ended their season with a 17-3 record. The Wolverines lost their last game in Philomath to Christ Center for the berth to District in a tie-breaking situation.

Greg Grant was the new coach; he played a unique type of ball, with a fast pace and lots of running.

Jason Hill led the team in scoring with 337 points, followed by Bryan Hendrix with 217. Hendrix and Hill led in rebounding with 158 each. Mike Pearson had 78 assists, backed by Hill with 56. Hill also led in steals with 65, followed by Chris Bauer, who had 51.

Hill was named Most Valuable Player, Hendrix Most Improved, Pearson Most Inspirational, and Bauer and Dennis Hendrix Best Defensive Players.

Wrestling

All three wrestlers advanced to the district tournament; Ken France (167) took third, Shoghi Tufts (148) placed second, and Tim France (115) took first. Tufts and Tim France both went on to the state meet, where France placed fifth.

Head coach and Athletic Director Gus Forster said the season went great for the number of athletes out: "At district, the team scored more points per wrestler than any other school." Shoghi Tufts received most improved. Tim France Most Valuable, and Ken France Most Inspirational. Troy Woolsley was assistant coach.

Upper right: Ken France tries to turn opponent. Below: Shoghi Tufts grimaces with effort in trying to maintain position.

Academics

Music

New teacher Linda Wooding continued and expanded the band and chorus programs; seven students took band and performed at the Christmas and Spring Programs, as well as at a few basketball games, the Hootenanny, and graduation. Sixteen students took chorus.

"My students learned how to read music and play musically," she said. "We really worked hard on rhythm and being precise in all classes. The kids seem to want to be more involved and excited about music."

The band class went on two field trips: one to OSU to hear the university's concert band play, and one to WOSC to a Band Festival.

Above: Members of the high school band (Jon Short, Shoghi Tufts, and Donovan Schmidt) perform in Spring Program.

Top: Teacher Linda Wooding plays her flute with the band during Christmas Music Program. Above: The high school chorus performs under the sound shells at Christmas.

Social Studies

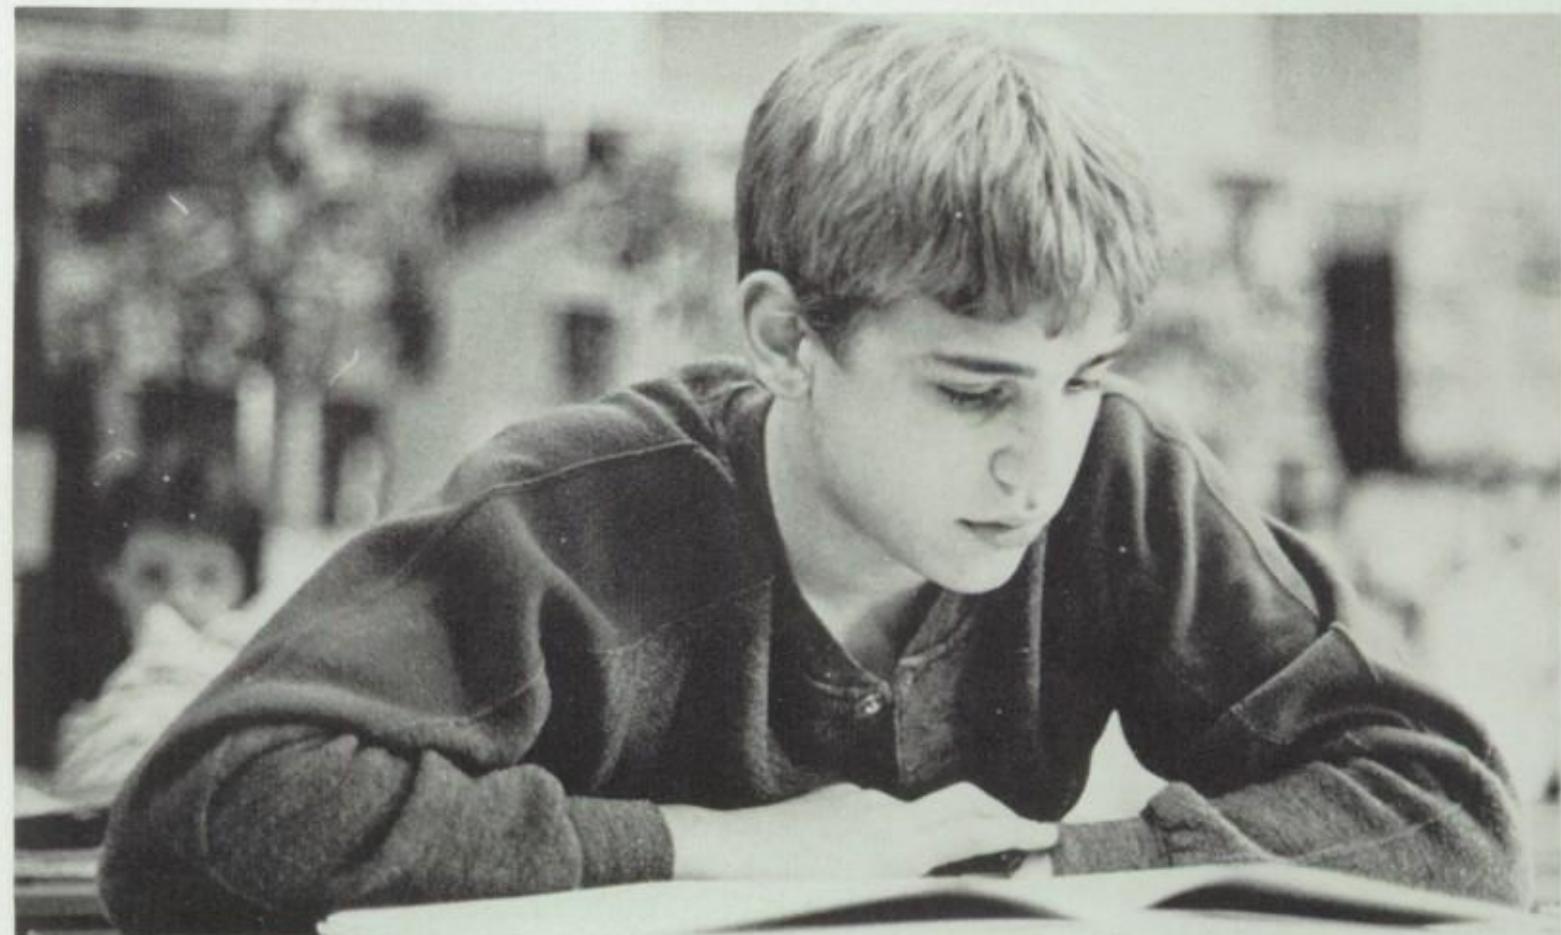

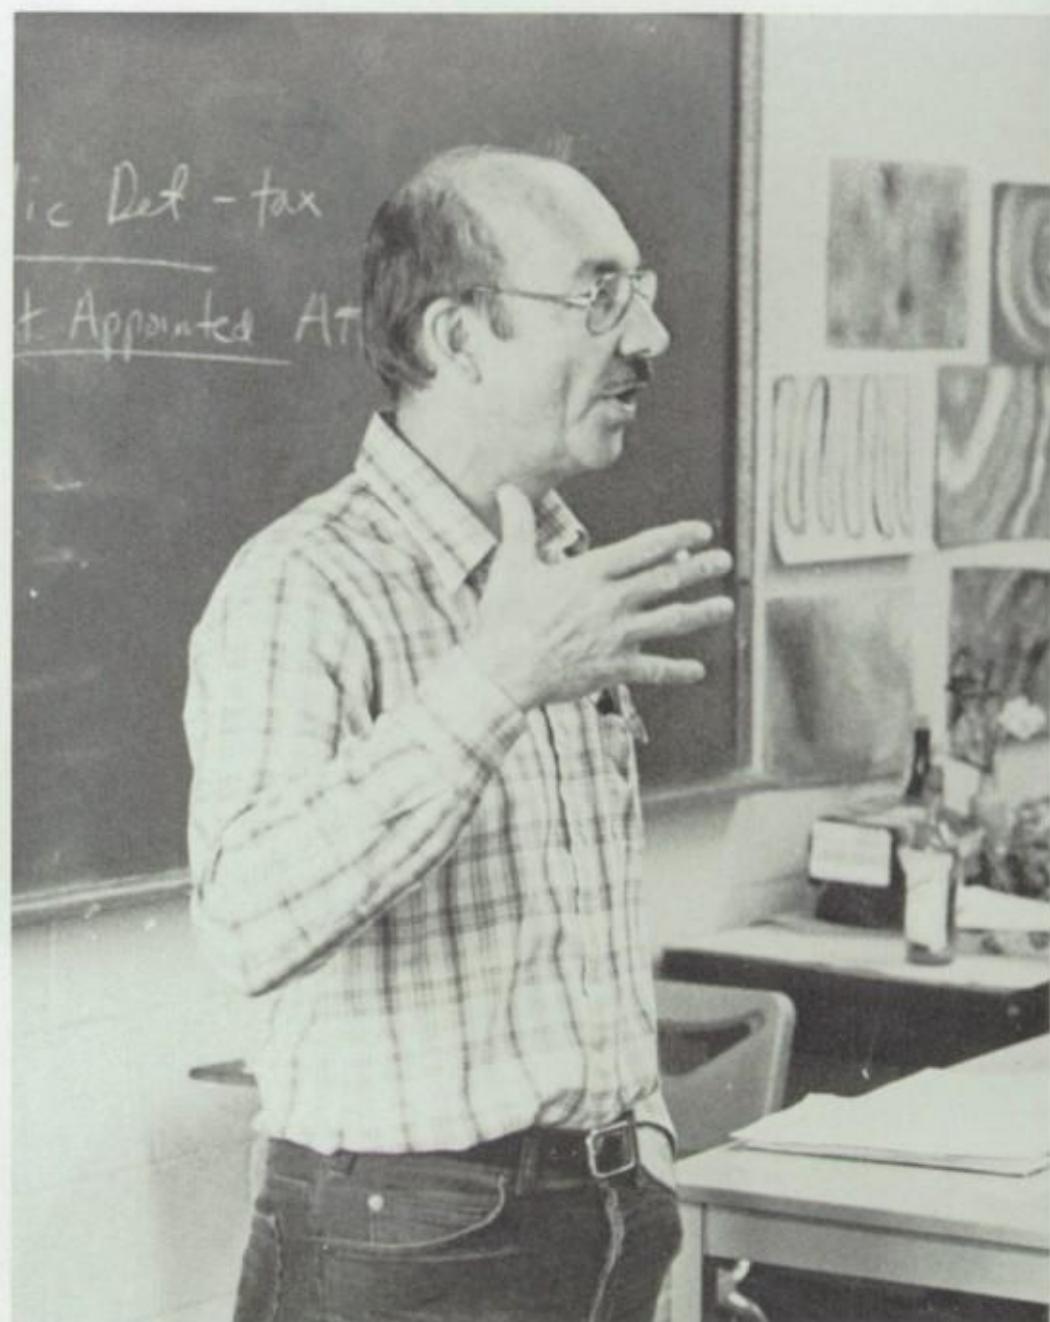

Jim Mullenix, who taught modern problems, had Superintendent Bill Dahlien as a guest speaker about the school budget. The class also heard a speaker discuss the criminal justice system. A new, in-depth focus of the class was a 12-week unit on economics. The freshman global studies class, taught by Gus Forster, seemed to like the individual projects on countries of their choice.

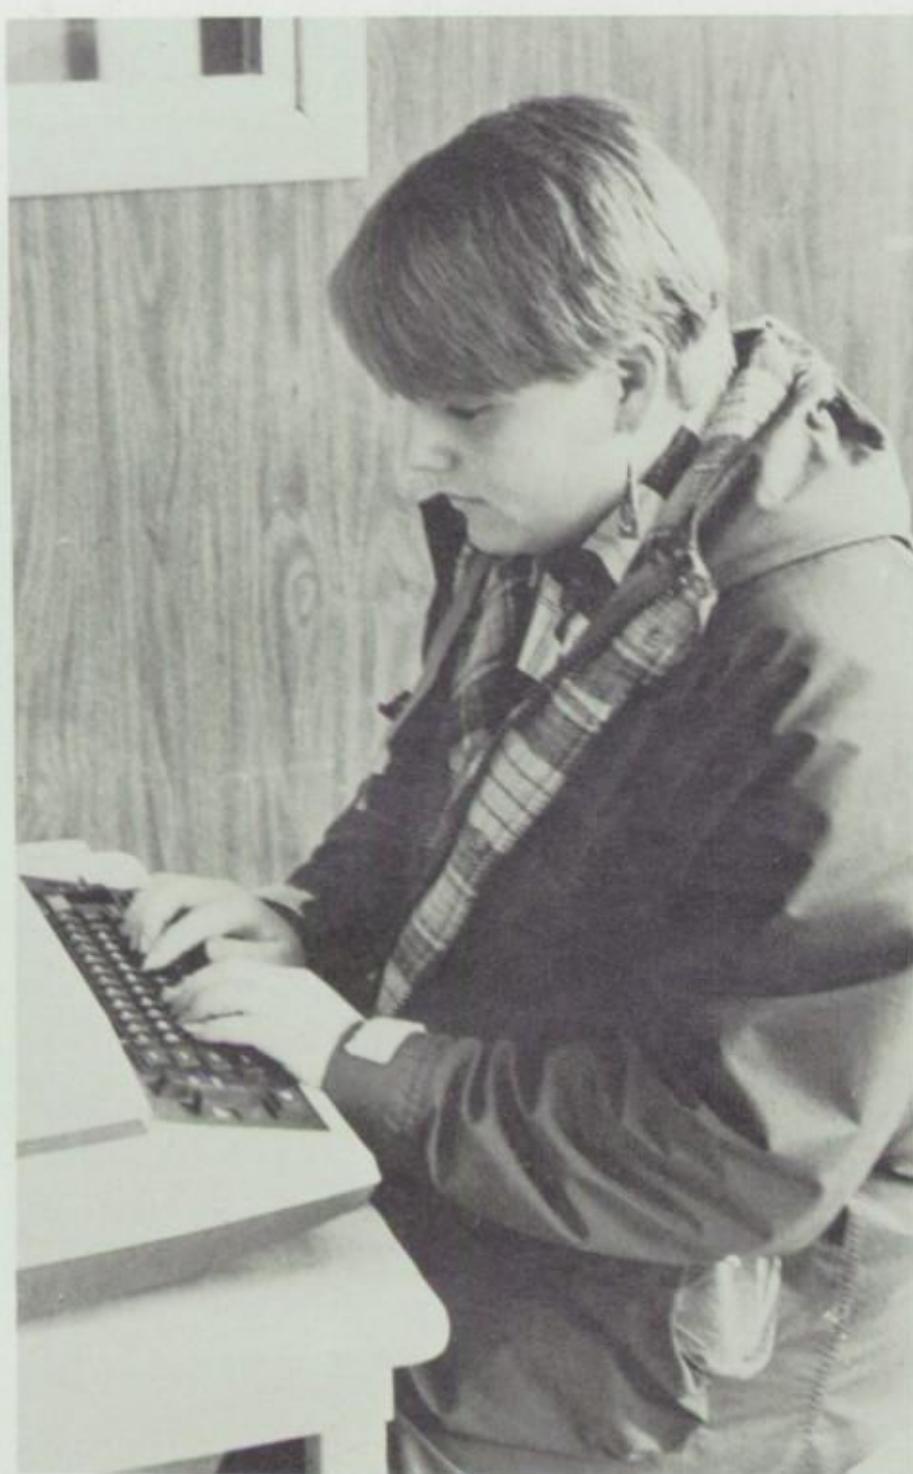

Jim Mullenix also taught U.S. history and career education/local government.

Business

Bob Smith, hired as the new business teacher, taught classes in personal finance, accounting, typing, and two sections of business lab. The senior personal finance class heard an outside speaker on insurance and took two field trips, one to Silverton to visit a trailer factory and the other to a home to learn about consumer tips in home buying. Classes received three new typewriters.

Math

Advanced math, Algebra I and II, and geometry were taught by Ron Nicholson. He worked up new units in graphing and probability for his students. New teacher Bob Smith taught applied math and 9th grade math.

About 20 math students participated in the LBCC Regional Contests; combined with students from other classes, they won the first place participation trophy.

Many math students focused their attention for a few weeks on making special projects for the Projects Fair in May.

Below: John Jones works on algebra problem in relay math contest at LBCC Skills Contests. Bottom: Doug Herron chucks a softball in outdoor algebra activity to determine its trajectory and speed. Left: Ellen Schwarzier measures Jamie Foster to see how the Golden Ratio applies to body proportions.

Science

New teacher Gary Vaterlaus taught physical science to the freshmen, biology to the sophomores, and two science electives of advanced biology and psychology. (Chemistry was also offered as an elective; see page 41.)

The advanced biology class took a three-day field trip to the Clarmont Basin near Fossil in central Oregon. They took several day-long hikes to study the world-famous fossil beds and the flora and fauna of the area.

Below: At LBCC Skills Contests, Torsten Green and Jason Hill work on science test involving a pendulum.

Health

Most of the junior class studied health with Patsy Jones. They read materials and viewed films on a wide variety of subjects, including drugs, alcohol, nutrition, emergency medicine, and family life.

In the spring, they took a field trip to Corvallis to see housing for the elderly, the McHenry Funeral Home, and the obstetrics ward and emergency room at Good Samaritan Hospital.

Ms. Jones and Jamie Farrington demonstrated CPR (Cardio-Pulmonary Resuscitation) techniques as part of the first aid unit.

P.E.

New teacher Greg Grant taught the two p.e. classes. The advanced class did lots of conditioning throughout the year, with some individualized programs. They also did the same series of units on various sports as the regular p.e. class: volleyball, basketball, golf, and badminton.

Chemistry

Chemistry students, taught by Ron Nicholson, did many individualized projects in addition to the usual curriculum. Marlanea Passarge, for example, made a pinhole camera and her own photographic paper; Donovan Schmidt made a battery charger; Bryan Hendrix studied electroplating and made his own tempered steel tools; and Torsten Green interfaced a computer with lab equipment.

Computer Science

For the first time in a computer science class at Alsea, students learned to program in PASCAL, a language that requires more pre-planning and procedural steps than BASIC. For term projects, students made several practical applications in programming.

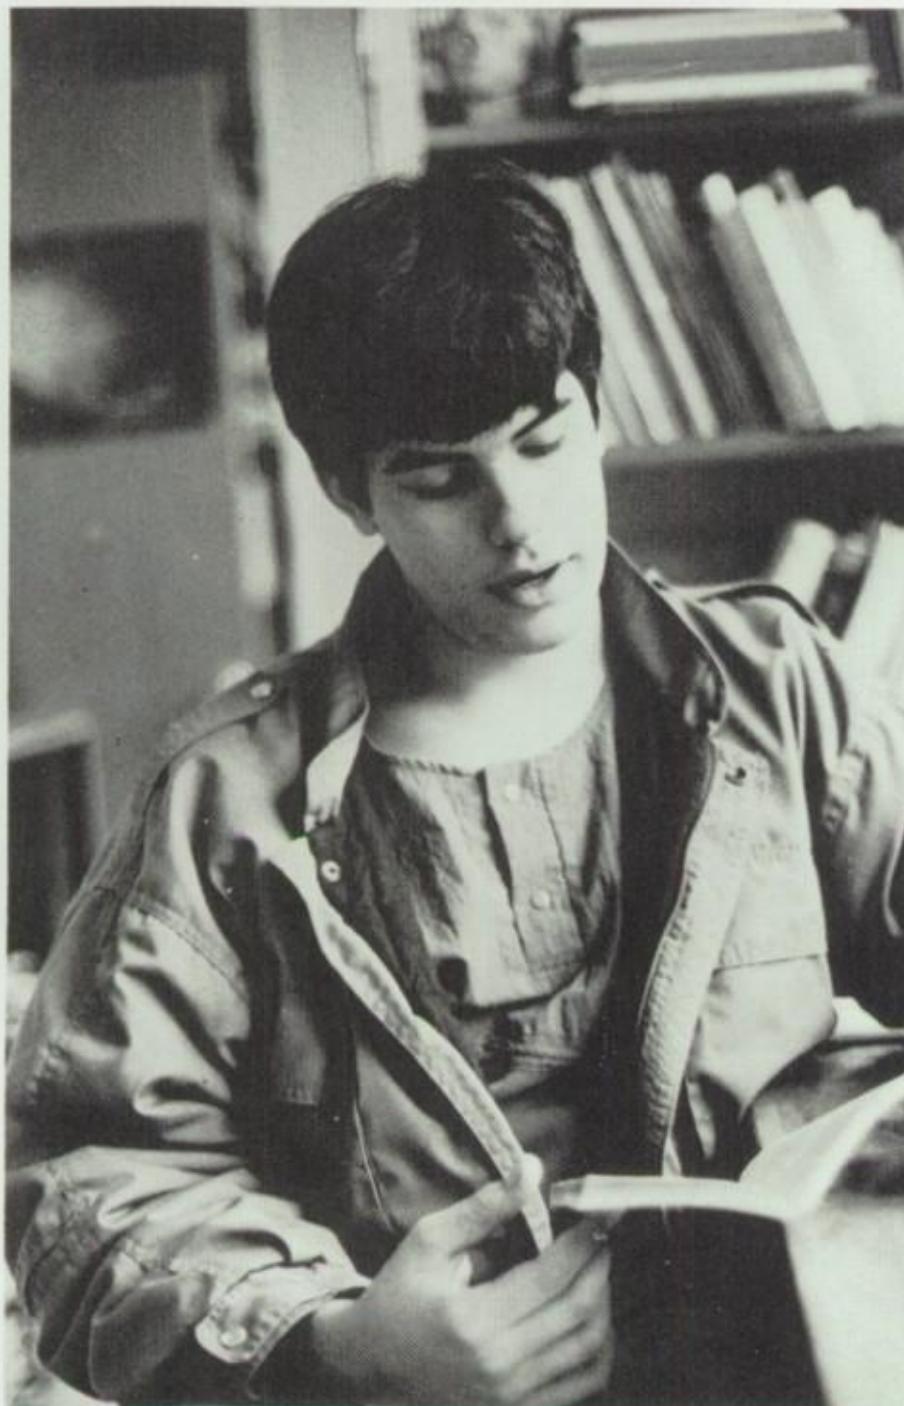

Above: Using an Apple IIE and its printer in computer science class are Donovan Schmidt and Eric Sutter. Right: Dennis Hendrix types in his computer program.

French

Grammar, vocabulary, and conversational French were some of the areas addressed by first-year teacher Susan Theirl. In the fall, the five students held a few breakfasts of croissants and jam with juice. (By second semester, three students remained in the class.) They also did research into the country and its culture and obtained pen-pals.

English

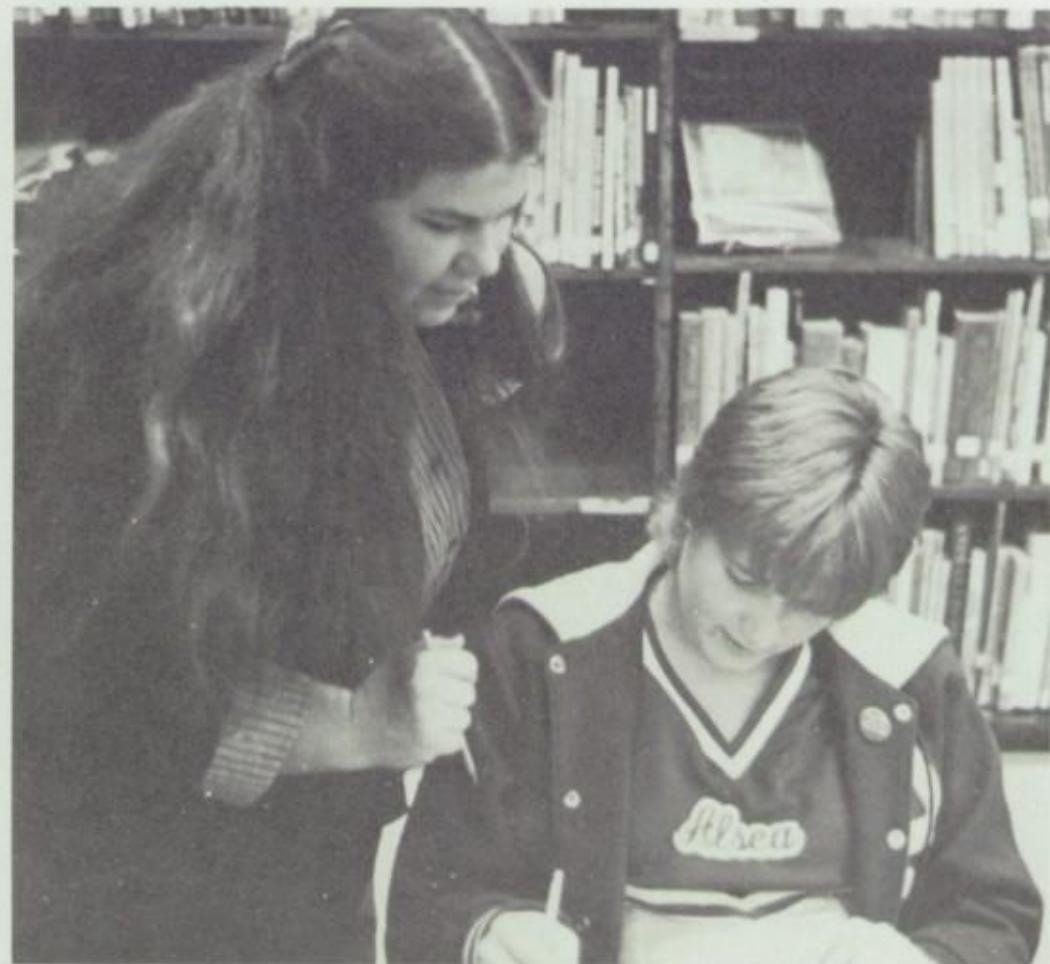

New English teacher Susan Theirl taught 8th, 9th, and 10th grade English, and Bonnie Hill taught the 7th, 11th and 12th. Both emphasized composition, but also studied many forms of literature with their students. Study skills and speaking before a group were also among the areas covered in the classes. The only English elective was in effective reading, taught by Bonnie Hill.

Media

Media specialist Patsy Jones oversaw the operation of the library and media equipment. Joni Hendrix was the new aide; she helped students in grades kindergarten through 12 with media projects designed by Ms. Jones and with research assignments from other classes.

Right: Patsy Jones helps Ann Olsen find research materials for a paper in English 11.

Art

For the first time in many years, high school students were offered a full year of art taught by a certified art teacher. Susan Theirl involved students in many different kinds of projects and media, including drawing, printing, weaving, painting (both acrylics and watercolors), and making three-dimensional objects with materials such as toothpicks and styrofoam.

Newspaper

The newspaper staff earned first place in the 'A' Division of the Publications Olympics sponsored by the Oregon Journalism Education Association. Fifteen individual awards contributed to the First Place Sweepstakes Award: first places in News Series (Jason Hill), InDepth Feature (Donovan Schmidt, Maureen Richardson, Marlaea Passarge, Marvin Goodwin, Jason Hill), Color Feature (Marvin Goodwin), Sports Feature (Jason Hill), Editorial Cartoon (Marc Gonzalez), Page One Layout (Maureen Richardson and Marlaea Passarge), Inside Page Layout (Marvin Goodwin); second places in News Feature (Jason Hill), Editorial Writing (Donovan Schmidt), Sports News (Jason Hill), Art Work (Marc Gonzalez); third places in Best Single Issue, Personality Feature (Marlaea Passarge).

The yearbook staff worked on a book with a theme of "We've Got the Beat." Advertising paid for all printing costs.

Marc Gonzalez took second place in the Layout and Design Contests at the LBCC Regional Skills Contests; Cinnamon Poulsom placed third in the Photojournalism Contest, and Stephanie Short took third in the "People" category of the Juried Photo Contest. Alsea's Graphics Arts Team, comprised of yearbook, newspaper, Kingfisher and photography students, placed second overall.

Kingfisher

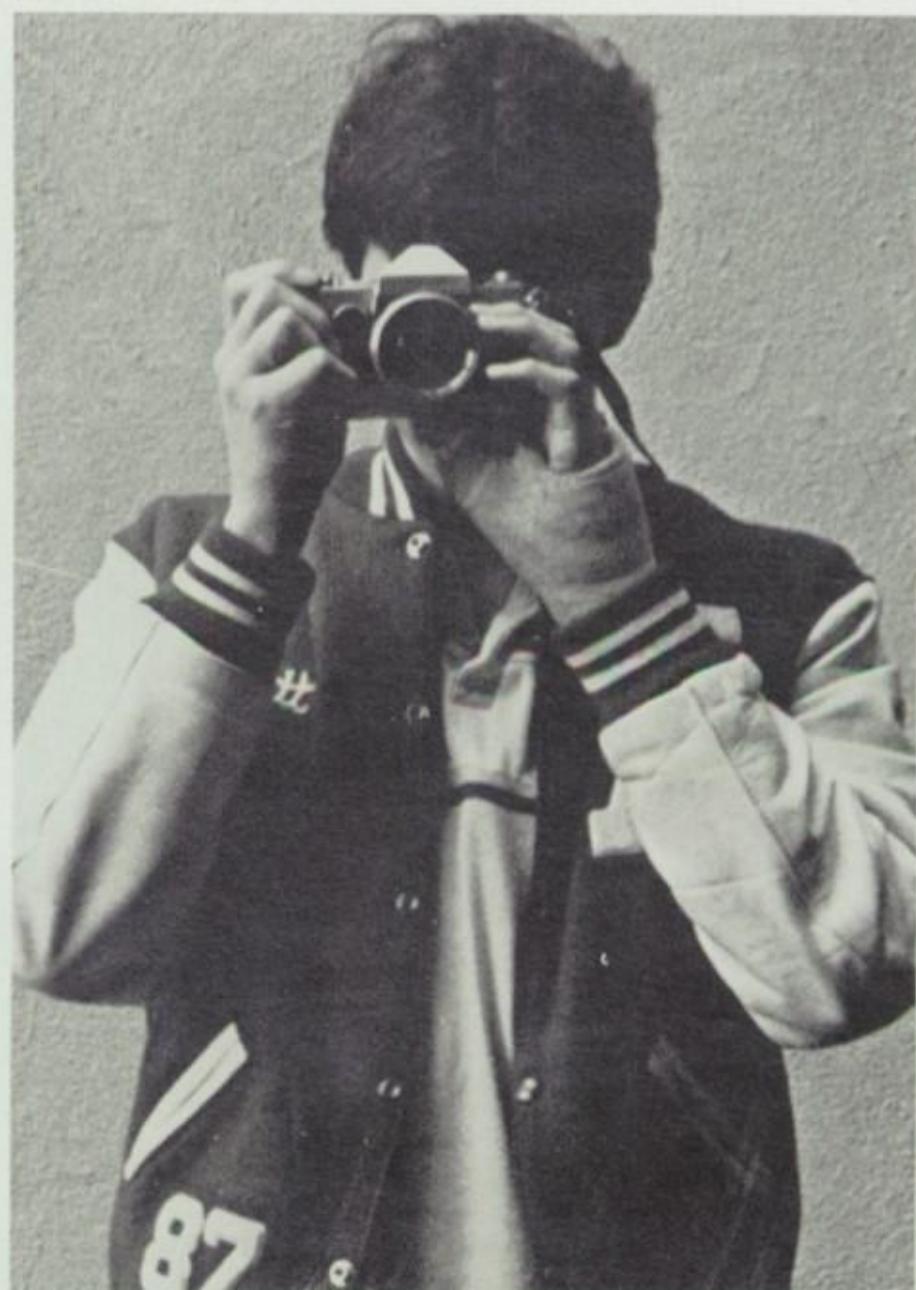

The five-member Kingfisher class focused their issue on the ways people celebrated events and on links between Alsea's and Waldport's history. "I like working at my own pace," said Jennifer Faith about the class. Burke Hendrix said he enjoyed "interacting with other people and learning about Alsea's history."

The class, and especially the previous year's issue, (1984-85) was featured in the Eugene Register-Guard and in Oregon magazine.

Teacher Patsy Jones and students Jennifer Faith and Shelley Davis made two oral presentations about the class-one at Lewis and Clark and one at the Benton Historical Society.

Photography students, taught by Jim Mullenix, learned and practiced many different techniques of taking photos and making prints. Dennis Hendrix took third place in the "Objects" category of the LBCC Juried Photo Contest, and all students displayed their work at the Projects Fair. The class included Chris Whitlock, Scott Dixon, Steve Woosley, Dennis Hendrix, and Tim France.

Administration

Administrative duties were redefined: Gus Forster, hired as new high school principal, also taught two classes. One strength was that he seemed to relate to students well. The superintendent became the elementary principal; Bill Dahlien was hired for one year when the school board was unable to fill the position permanently.

Billie Winney was secretary/receptionist. Jean Carroll replaced Gwen Bruneau as District Deputy Clerk, who was on a year's maternity leave. Jim Mullenix served as counselor, and Rosie Stone was an aide.

Maintenance

Don May was hired to assist Bill Esler, who headed the maintenance department. Throughout the year, both men monitored the new heating system that had been installed during the summer. Several changes and improvements were made on the basis of their recommendations to make the system more efficient.

The high school custodian was Rosie Valencia, while Jody Free worked in the elementary wing.

Left: As part of Bill Esler's job, he grades the driveway to the back parking lot. Below: One of Rosie Valencia's many jobs was cleaning the desks.

School Board

The composition of the school board changed considerably during the year. Walt Short resigned to substitute teach, and Judy Gonzalez was appointed to finish his term. In March, Judy Gonzalez and Mimi Stout ran unopposed for their positions, and Ken Jones was elected to the third open position.

After an unsuccessful search for a superintendent in August, the board resumed the search in March.

Honor Society

New members in the Honor Society were Maureen Richardson, Donovan Schmidt, Burke Hendrix, Eric Sutter, Syrena Glade, and Marvin Goodwin. At the installation, members of the Hi-Q team played a few matches with their parents and other community members.

The theme of the Hootenanny was "Vacation," which featured Honor Society skits with a series of tourist and terrorist-related jokes. President Bryan Hendrix was the Master of Ceremonies.

The group, advised by Patsy Jones, also sponsored their yearly Halloween Carnival; many people had worked to improve the Haunted House, which was the highlight of the carnival.

Student Council

Student Council officers were president Mike Pearson, vice-president Jason Hill, treasurer Torsten Green, secretary Maureen Richardson, publicity manager Marc Gonzalez. The group helped remodel and paint the football concessions stand.

To raise money, they sponsored a donkey basketball game in the spring, which was well-attended. Many students and teachers participated.

The spring elections for the 1986-86 officers were memorable because of the high number of candidates. Most candidates ran as a member of either the Breakfast Club or the Toga Party, possibly the first time that political parties have ever been formed at Alsea. Candidates' signs and speeches reflected much time and effort.

Teacher Jim Mullenix advised the Council.

Track

The boys' track team tied for third place at the Class 'B' Invitational. Mike Pearson took first in the pole vault, Bryan Hendrix took third in the shot and first in the discus, Chris Bauer took third in the 200 meter, and both relay teams took third.

At the State 'A' meet, Bryan Hendrix took second in the discus with a personal best of 153'8"; Bauer placed third in the 200 meter, also with a personal best of :22.8, and the 400 relay team placed sixth.

About 15 students participated on the team, coached by Mary Watkins and Gary Vaterlaus.

Prom & Banquet

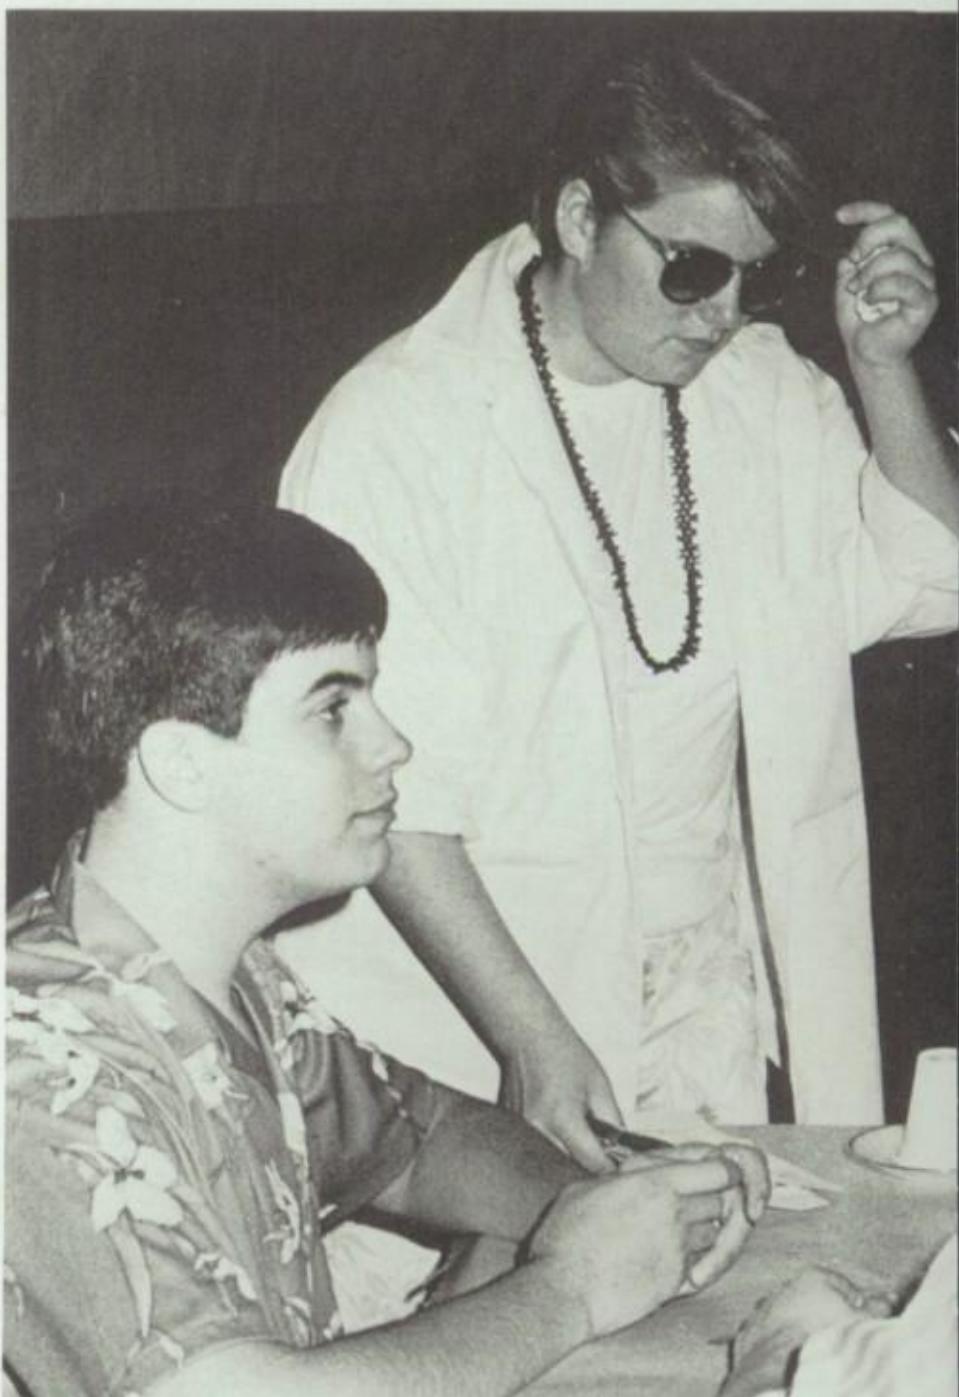

The Junior-Senior Banquet was held in late May about three weeks before the prom. Juniors and their parents decided to hold a Hawaiian luau in honor of the seniors' planned trip to Hawaii. The menu included shish-kebabs, fried rice with vegetables, fruit salad in watermelon halves, and Hawaiian wedding cake. Bryan Hendrix read the senior wills, and Jason Hill read the prophecy.

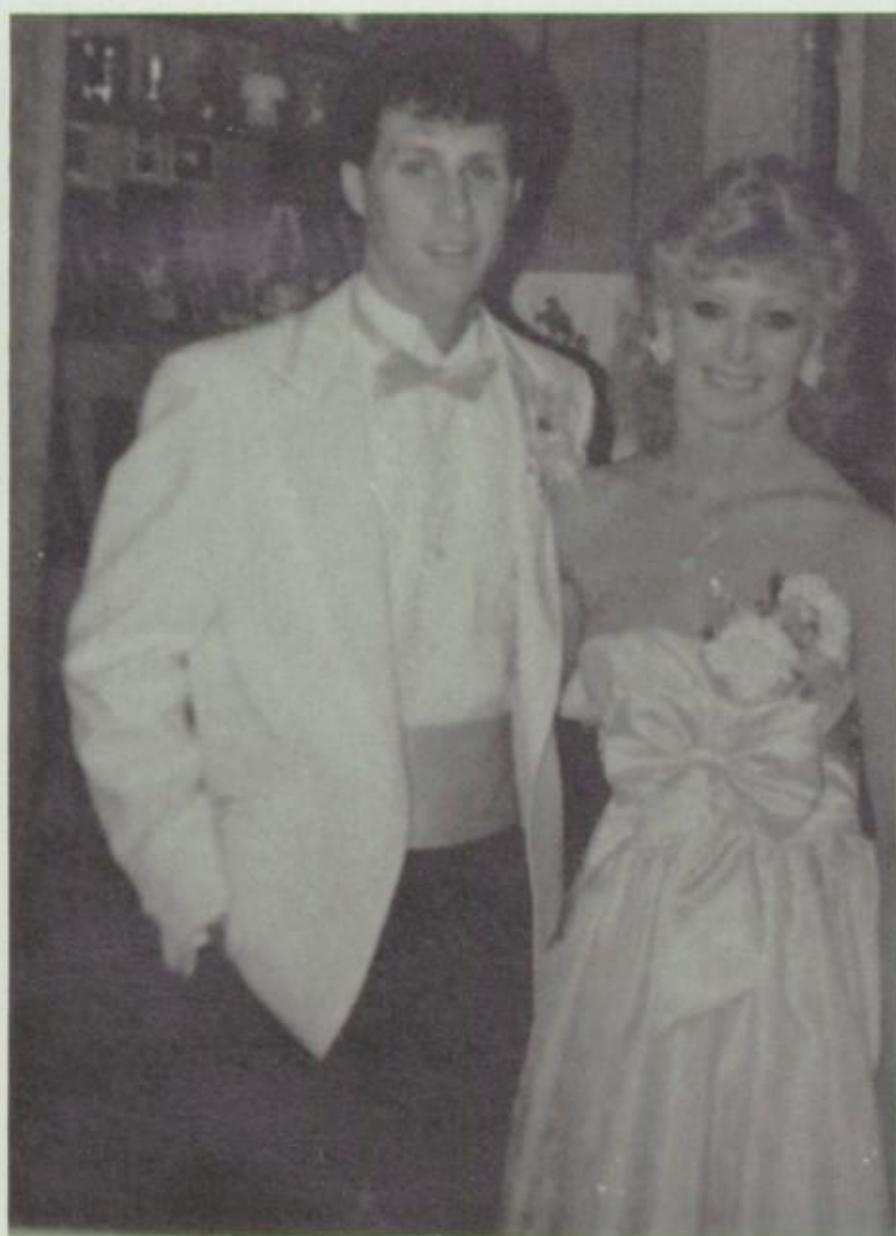

For the second year in a row, the prom was held at the Bayshore Inn Beach Club in Waldport. The same disc jockey who provided the music at the Sweethearts' Ball and the Homecoming Dance played music and provided a light show. Many students said they enjoyed themselves.

Top: At luau, Jill Olsen visits with friends and relatives. Above: Dressed up for the prom are Kathy Campbell and Troy Woosley.

Graduation

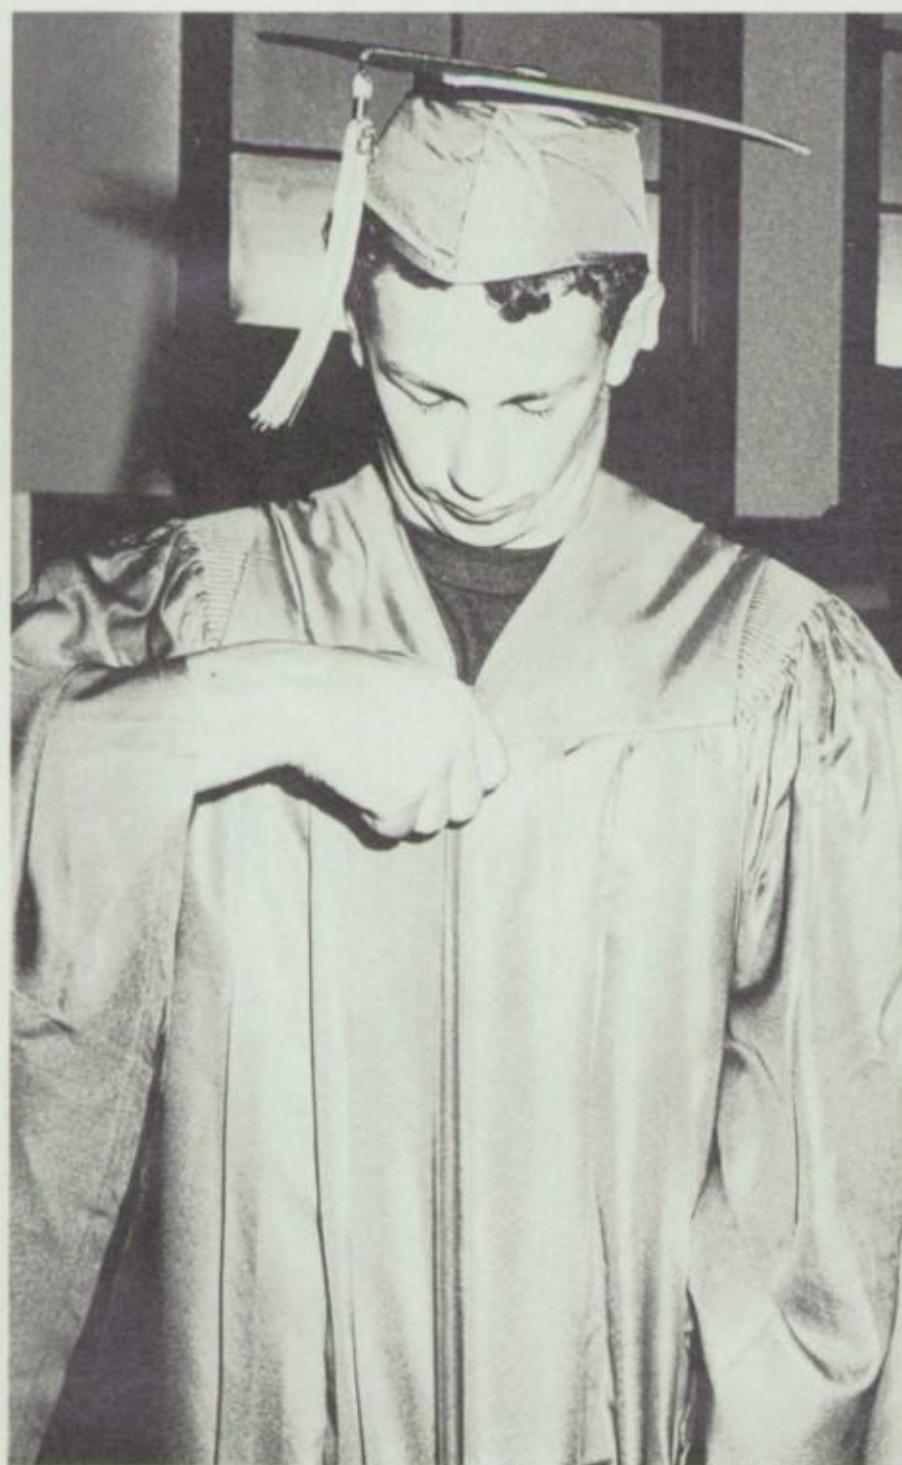

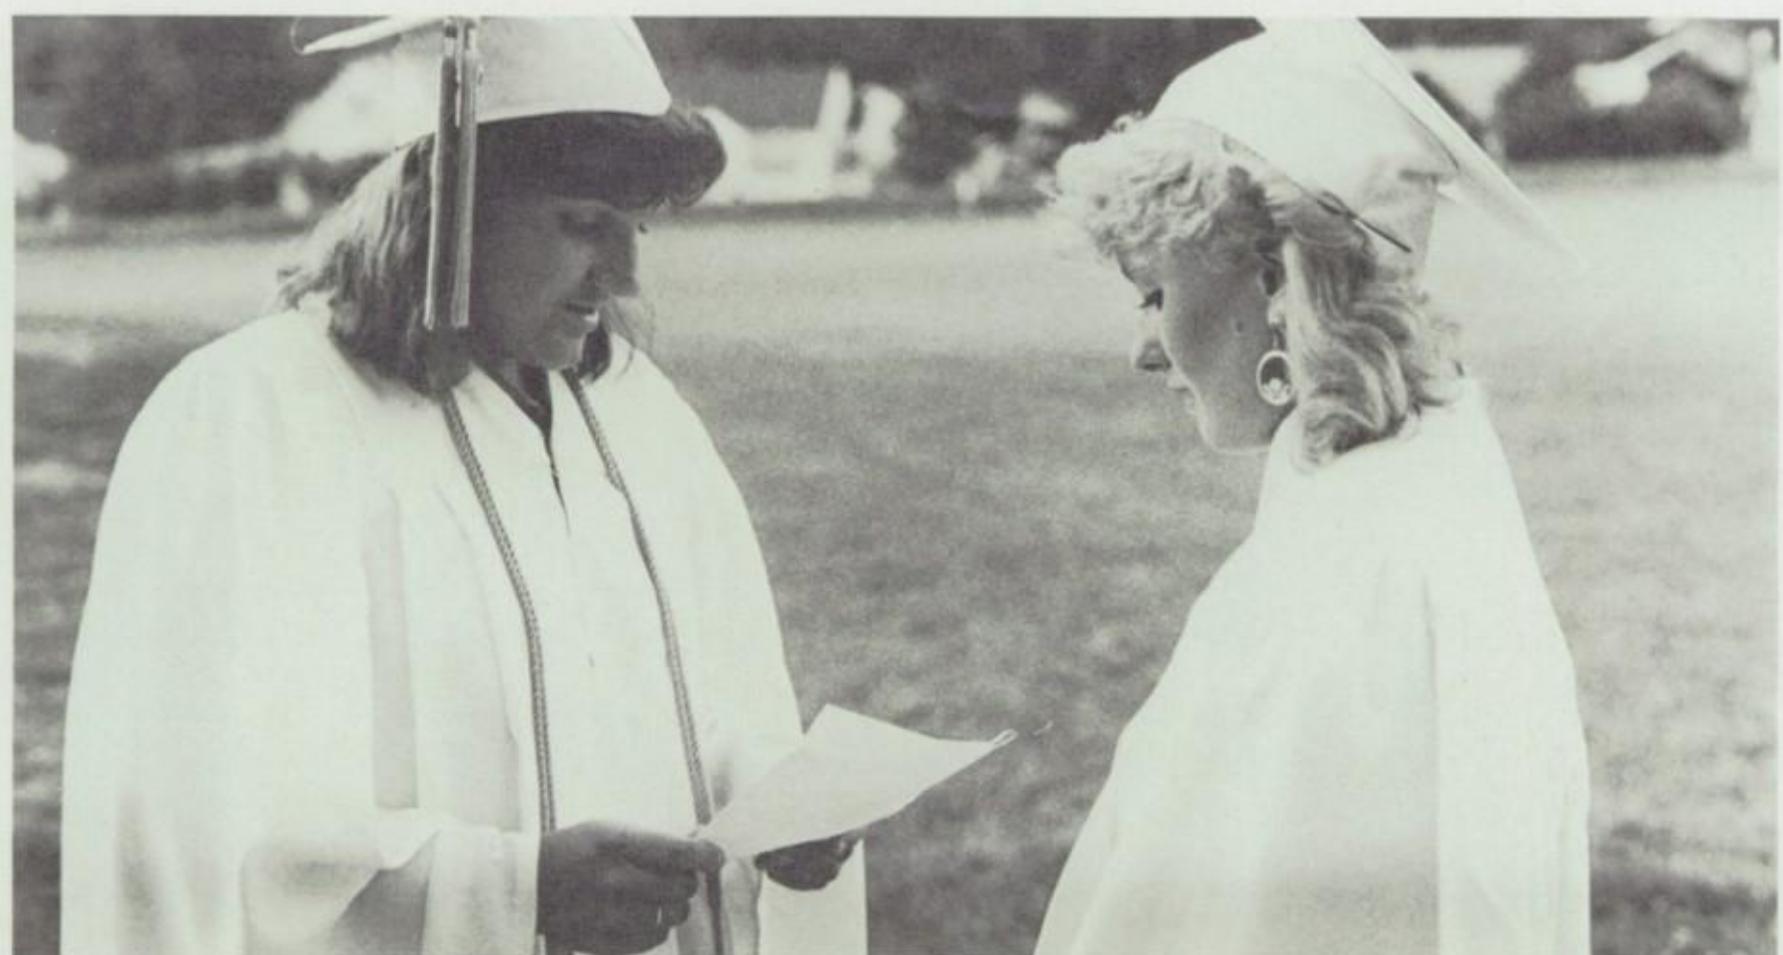

Raymond "Bud" Lyons, who was a 1964 Alsea graduate and is now a teacher at North Salem High School, was guest speaker at graduation. He said that Alsea students are lucky because they can fulfill dreams, always knowing that they can come back to a community that really cares about them.

The invocation and benediction were given by Jill Olsen; Dennis Hendrix led the Pledge of Allegiance; Cinnamon Poulsom gave the valedictorian's speech, and Bryan Hendrix spoke as the class salutatorian. Rosie Stone read a poem she had written about the class.

Four scholarships were awarded: Kathy Campbell received a tuition grant to LBCC, and Bryan Hendrix was awarded OSU Folk Club, Bradfield, and Booster Scholarships. Cinnamon Poulsom was recognized as an Oregon Scholar, which is an honor given on the basis of GPA.

Spring Candids

Left: The advanced biology class went on a field trip in April to the fossil beds of the Clarmont Basin in Central Oregon; here students explore the area.

Above: Instructed by a guide on the advanced biology field trip, Jamie Foster digs for fossils on hillside.

Left: On a hot day, Linda and Ellen Schwarzer run through sprinklers in P.E. Top: Young Life "kids" act out careers in hootenanny skit. Center: King Arthur (Donovan Schmidt) issues an order in "Sir Gawaine." Above: Shaving in a skit for the hootenanny is teacher Tim Rohrer.

Left: Doug Herron centers an assignment in business class. Below: Dancing dramatically in the library, Jennifer Faith and Heather Dair clown around. Bottom: A Hi-Q team, coached by teacher Ron Nicholson, participated in about nine meets; the meets consisted of rapid-fire questions and answers about subjects that ranged from math and science to literature, social studies, and the arts. Here, Jason Hill, Bryan Hendrix, Torsten Green and Donovan Schmidt confer about an answer in a three-way meet held at Alsea. Nine students participated on the team.

Junior High

The junior high had an especially successful year in sports. The 35-member soccer team, coached by Tim Rohrer, took first place in their league. The girls' basketball team, coached by Gilbert Strom, took second in their league, and the boys' team, coached by Dan Winney, placed first. Teacher Bob Smith coached a junior high track team in the spring. The turnout for all sports was very high.

In the spring, students participated in a math competition called Pentagames. Teacher Ron Nicholson sponsored the group.

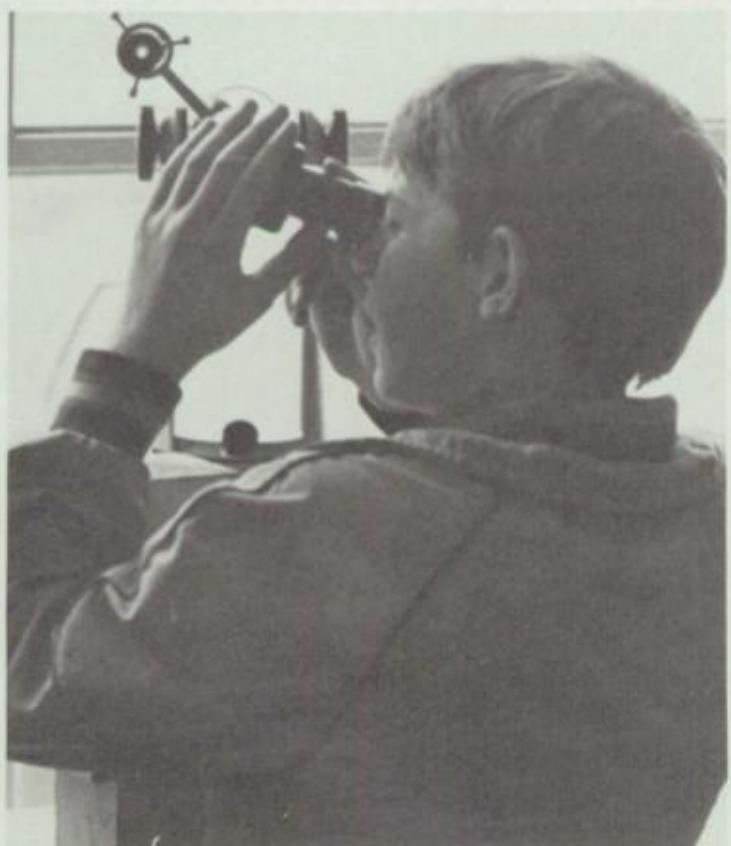

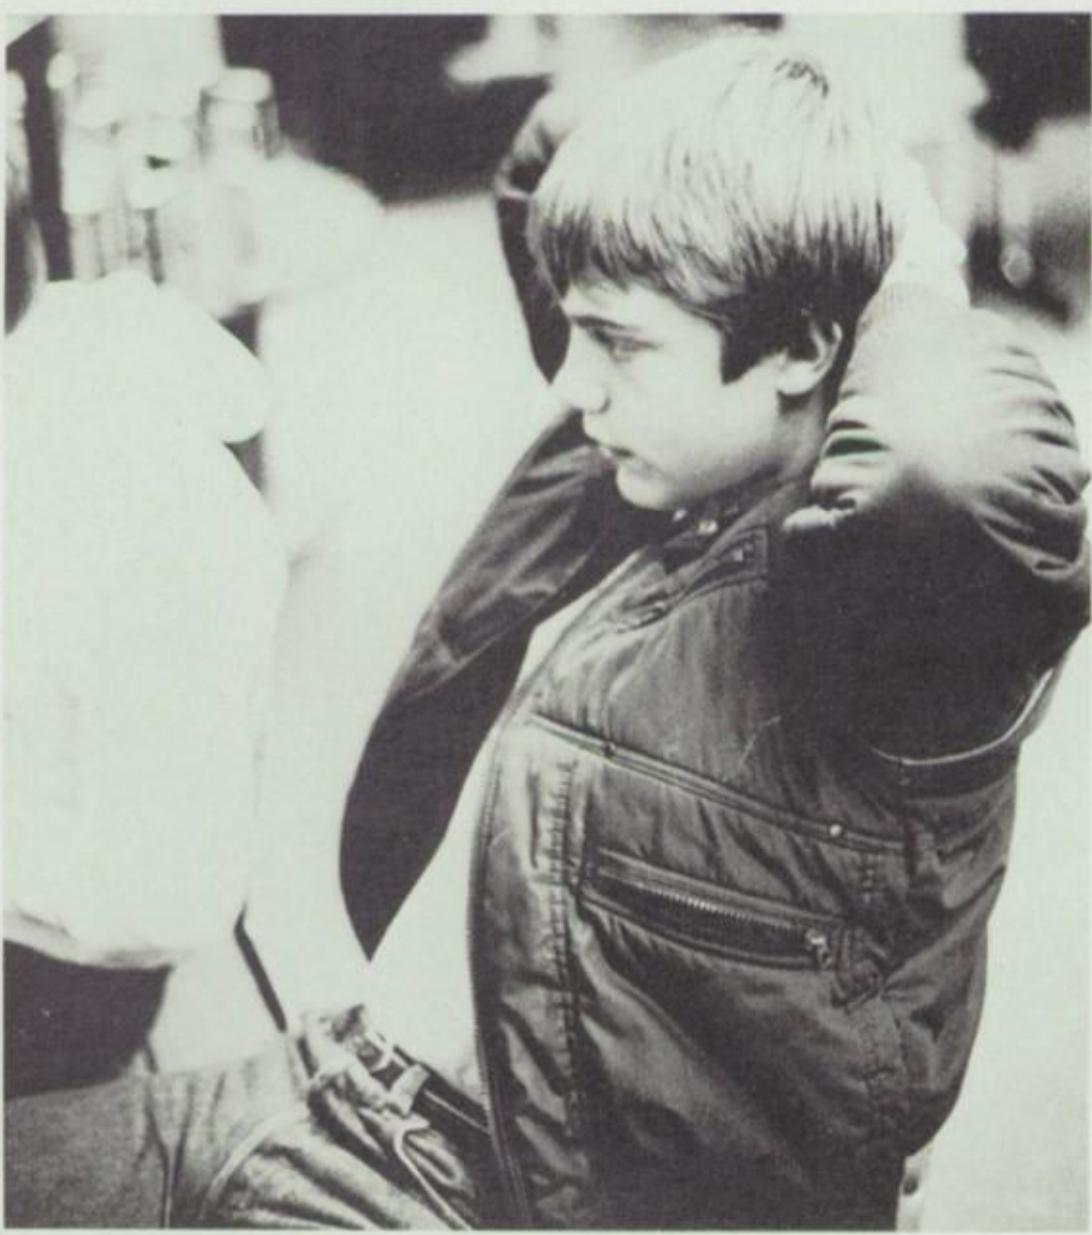

To raise money, the 7th grade sponsored a volleyball and a basketball tournament; they were advised by Bob Smith and Cathy Forster. The 8th grade sold stuffed animals; their advisers were Gary Vaterlaus and Greg Grant.

Elementary

The elementary school had an interim principal, Bill Dahlien, who was also the district superintendent. Teacher Tim Rohrer returned to teach the sixth grade, and Linda Wooding was a new music teacher.

Grade school students enjoyed the Halloween Carnival sponsored by the Honor Society, the Christmas crafts activities, Grandparents Day in May, tree planting, the two music programs, and their holiday room parties.

KINDERGARTEN: Katie Anderson, Katie Sapp, Jonathan Pearson, Chad Weist, Kasey Olsen, Skye Bowen, Joel Schreiber, John Sease, and teacher Elaine Forester.
